MISSION FOCUS

Jefferson & Carol
Hernandez
Sterling, Virginia

Jefferson and Carol Hernandez planted Iglesia Biblica Campo Blanco in Sterling, Virginia. Inspired by Jesus’ words in John 4 that the fields are white for harvest, in English, campo blanco means “white fields,” and the name reflects the church’s mission to reach the many Hispanic immigrants moving to the community of Sterling, a place Jefferson now calls “white fields.” The name fits the Loudoun County community perfectly. In recent years, it has become a popular landing spot for immigrants from Latin America. Jefferson and Carol began the church by walking the streets of their neighborhood, sharing the gospel, and praying with the people they met. This led to Bible studies and eventually the formation of Iglesia Biblica Campo Blanco. Today the church fills up the fellowship hall of a local sister church, with 70 percent of attendees having met Christ through the church plant. It has plans to start a second church to reach the Hispanic population in a nearby Northern Virginia community.
